INFO CORNER

FTL and Buffer Zone

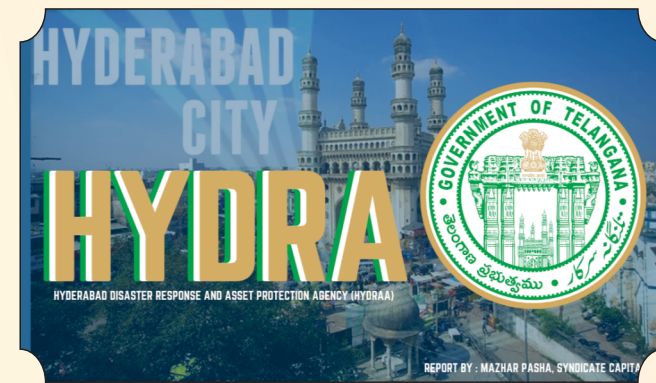

FTL stands for Full Tank Level, and it refers to the highest water level a body of water can reach, such as a lake or tank. The buffer zone is the designated area around the FTL where development is restricted or regulated.

FTL and buffer zones are important concepts in urban planning and water bodies, and they help with:

- Environmental protection: They help maintain the ecological balance, prevent pollution, and conserve water bodies.

- Flood mitigation: They act as natural buffers to absorb excess water during heavy rains, reducing the risk of flooding in surrounding areas.
- Groundwater recharge: They help with groundwater recharge.
- HYDRAA

The Indian Meteorological Department was created in 1875 after a devastating cyclone killed tens of thousands in colonial Bengal. "Similarly, the Hyderabad Disaster Response and Asset Protection Agency (HYDRAA) has been created for a similar purpose to tackle urban flooding and disaster management in the modern and rapidly urbanizing State,"
